A sturdy, fine looking young man, more than six feet high, walked into the office of the Bellevue Hospital late last night. He wore a large slouch hat and workingman's clothes. A silk handkerchief was tied around his neck, and a cartridge belt such as is worn by hunters in the far west was buckled around his waist. He inquired of the clerk at the desk whether Mrs. Johan-na Robinson had died there last Sunday. His broad accent proved him a westerner. The clerk examined the register and found that Mrs. Johanna Robinson, sixty years old, of No. 427 east Fifteenth street, had died of pulmonaris in the hospital on Sunday.

She had walked into the hospital on the previous Tuesday and had died af-ter five days of lingering illness.

As this entry was read to the young man he became very pale, the corners of his mouth twitched and his hands therefore I must lose the joy I would have felt had I seen her again and told ther that she would be without care in the ature. It is hard to believe. Only two hours ago I arrived in this city from the far West. I had not seen my mother for more than 25 years. I was a mere boy then. I have lived among strangers and cattlemen. I had no home. I made money and spent it, come to New York to visit her. I thought I would surprise her, and I was happy in the anticipation of how glad we two would be. When I arrived to-might I did not have much bag-gage along, for I intended to return with my mother to my home out west as quickly as possible. I hurried from Jersey City to where my mother had lived. I inquired for Mrs.

Drohan, with whom she roomed. The flat was shown me, and when I rapped at the door, there was a swelling in my throat that choked me. An old lady

"I suppose you must be told. Your mother died at Bellevue Hospital last Sunday.

"I am not easily shocked, but some-how I did not know what happened during the next few minutes. can remember is that somebody gave me a glass of water and told me the way to the hospital."

The young man was silent for a few moments. Then he cried:—"Now" I find her ready for a pauper's grave! Oh, mother I was not bad! I thought of you often!"

When he recovered he said to the clerk: "I'll die rather than see my mother in Potter's Field. She shall have a grave as good and honorable as any mother. Can you keep the body for a few days until I get money from the West. I have no friends here and no money. Please do that for a poor fellow in trouble." low in trouble."
